Okay, we have a new confirmed meeting location. 15 of us were there at the May meeting and everyone liked the Playa Azul. The staff is friendly and the food is better than "the other place".

Our next meeting is JUNE 25, which is our PICNIC meeting. Like last year the club will be buying the food. You will have to pay for any alcoholic beverages. Unlike last year, the Playa Azul does not have a Taco Bar. BUT wait. They do have two sections of their menus that we can order food from within a price range that fits our club's budget. The Small Dinners and the Senior plates. Please see page 2 for the menu that I typed up from photos I took at the restaurant. There is a great selection of food, far more variety than a taco bar.

I made several announcements at the May meeting.

The first being that we need someone to step-up and take over the Programs Coordinator position on the board of directors.

The other announcement was that I have cut way back on my fly fishing for the foreseeable future. Over the past 25 years I have purchased some really nice fly rods and some really nice fly reels. I do not like selling things, so I would much rather give some of these rods and reels to you, the club members. So, starting at the June picnic meeting, I will be bringing either a fly rod or a fly reel to be given away. I will have some special raffle tickets that you will be given to anyone who wants to maybe receive the rod or reel. Then a wining ticket will be plucked from a container. This will continue on through the rest of this year and who knows when.

We will continue to have our monthly raffles so everyone can have a chance to win some stuff.

We will also continue with our Raffle Board. It is 2/3 full right now, only ten squares left. The winner of that will have a choice from three really nice fly fishing related items.

I hope you are all doing well and having fun. Summer is nearly upon us and by the time our June meeting rolls around we should be well into the start of that sunny weather. That means many of you will be going out to enjoy the water. So please remember to take care when you are out and about. Those rocks in the streams and rivers can get really slippery. Use extra caution when you are trying to wade fish. When you are out in your boat or pontoon boat or raft, please have a PFD with you. When you are on the open road, don't over do it by trying to drive past your normal limits. Take some breaks and rest up between stretches.

"Time is but the stream I go a-fishing in. I drink at it; but while I drink, I see the sandy bottom and detect how shallow it is. Its thin current slides away, but eternity remains." Henry David Thoreau

Fly Fishing International Fly of the Month June 2010 RED BUTT ANT

By Bob Bates

Comments: Ants are found all over the world. They have been labeled our most abundant terrestrial insect with some 3,000 species worldwide (August 1999 Fly of the Month by Jim Abbs). Ant sizes range from #8 to #32 or smaller, and they come in variety of colors. Where Dave Millard lives in Tumwater, WA he thinks about the larger species of ants, and successfully fishes his ant pattern in many waters. He tied this pattern at the March 2010 N.W. Fly Tying & Fly Fishing Expo in Albany, Oregon. Ants hatch on land, and the only way they can get into the water is by falling into it. They drop from overhanging vegetation or crash when trying to fly over a water body. When there is an ant fall fish feed actively on the hapless insects. There is an advantage for the fish because ants have much more food value than mayflies or caddis flies. Also, some people say they have a tangy or spicy flavor, but I have not checked out that claim.

Lakes or streams with a predictable ant fall also attract anglers. Some of my friends plan a spring trip to a lake in British Columbia to fish the "ant hatch." Trout seem to lose their natural—wariness and hit flies with abandon. Sometimes at the beginning of the rise you can't tell what is happening because you don't see anything on the lake surface except rising fish. Usually the angler unsuccessfully offers a variety of dry flies to the wildly rising trout. When I heard a thunk behind me in my aluminum boat, tactics changed. A large black carpenter ant was trying to crawl up the side. I offered a low floating black pattern, and the fish cooperated. I let the fly float a little bit. If a fish didn't hit, a wiggle usually brought a strike. Ant patterns work in streams also. Usually a drag free float is recommended. Anytime and anywhere be alert for a potential "ant hatch," and carry a few ants.

Materials List:

Hook: Any dry fly, Eagle Claw, Mustad 94840 or Tiemco 100, size 12

Thread: 6/0 black Body:

Foam, 2mm thick and 3/16 inch wide, red and black

Legs: Grizzly saddle

Tying Steps:

- 1. Attach thread at back of hook. Attach red foam and fold it over. (Here it stays folded over because Dave was using sticky back foam. It is what he had left from other tying projects.) Regular foam is just fine.
- 2. Tie down foam and trim excess as shown.
- 3. Attach the black foam at front of hook as shown.
- 4. Fold black foam back, tie down securely.
- 5. Trim excess foam, and wind thread over any pieces of foam that are sticking out.
- 6. Select a dry fly feather with barbs that are about a gap width long, and tie it over the red foam with the longer part of feather pointing rearward. Leaving some bare shaft helps keep the wrapping neat.
- 7. Wrap feather from red bulge forward to near black bulge. Tie securely and trim excess.
- 8. Whip finish thread and trim. Turn hook over and trim bottom fibers even with hook shank. This makes the fly float low in the surface film.
- 9. Put a drop of head cement on thread winds.

Closing comments: This is not a difficult fly to tie, and at the right time you will be happy you made the effort. Look at the ants around your fishing waters, and tie a few patterns to match them. Especially, have a few black ants, in two or three sizes, in your fly box for emergencies. Then add a few others like the Red Butt to be on the safe side.

In Wildness is the Preservation of the World - "Henry David Thoreau"

Lake Life Beneath The Goddess of Dawn and the Northern Wind

("Aurora – goddess of dawn, Boreas – the northern wind)

Have you ever missed a place that you haven't yet left? That bittersweet moment as you leave, and you are already planning for next year. Some places bind themselves to your soul. Jimmy Buffet referred to them as "One Particular Harbor" – A place where everything eases, and you are rejuvenated. I just left such a place and I plan to return with the Ruddy Ducks and Red Winged Blackbirds next spring. The Goldeneye's are there to greet me when I arrive.

This particular harbor is located in Washington's Northeastern Cascades roughly 5 miles from the Canadian border at an elevation of 2,911 feet. It is surrounded by mountain crests that reach 7,410 feet above sea-level. The lake is surrounded by forested grasslands, sprinkled with sagebrush. During the last ice age, it slept beneath (2.5 miles) the Laurentide Ice Sheet, when the ice receded a mountain lake remained. Over centuries the land has rebounded, shifted, and its ice damns gave way, the lake shrank, leaving evidence of its ancient shorelines on the surrounding mountain slopes.

In its present configuration the lake has become a fly fishing only, trout paradise. The lakes' waters are healthy and rich with abundant aquatic insects, the rainbow trout are very well fed.

When the rainbows did take our flies, it was pure Blue-Ribbon Fishing. Twenty inchers were common, these trout were powerful and full of fight. Multiple jumps (Steve counted ten jumps on one fish) with takes that took you into your backing, were the norm. I had one fish that took me 15 plus minutes to bring to net, he circled my raft at least three times, interspaced with line stripping and reel singing runs. Four or more times I reeled him near my net, close enough to land him, but once he caught sight of the net, he left like a high-speed freight train, ripping the hard-fought line I had just reeled in off my spool as if it did not belong there. That is a fishing experience that will be cherished until I depart this earthly realm. Daily, each of us recounted stories of hard fighting bright and beautiful rainbow trout encounters, around the fire or over a fishing day-end thirst quenching beer. We had other stories to tell each other as well.

It was mating season at this "one particular harbor", the Ruddy Ducks and Goldeneye always provide endless entertainment. they often manage to pull one's attention away from one's task at hand. One warm morning with no clouds in sight I headed to the Northend of the lake to fish in the shade of lodge pole pines. But when I arrived two other fishermen were already prospecting the water. I pulled up the nearest tree and leaned back to watch and observe until they each landed a fish and departed. During my wait I was entertained by a pair of mating Goldeneyes, they were well into their coupling ritual. They were bobbing heads, rustling, and fluffing feathers, and mimicking each other's moves, with major eye contact and probably some heavy breathing.

Another male landed nearby, to display his prowess the male of the pair, beat his wings and ran on the lakes surface and charged the intruding male to drive him away from his intended mate. After driving off the interloper he returned in the same fashion he left, wings flapping and running on water aiming straight for his betrothed. As he approached, the female Goldeneye realized that he was not stopping and darted out of the way narrowly avoiding the collision. He pivoted as he came to a stop strutting his stuff seemingly saying ha-ha scared you didn't I. She returned his boasting with a missed me, missed me, now you got-a-kissme, flourish.

She was just as proud of her evasive maneuver as he was of his attack. They then merrily resumed their bobbing and mimicking dance. The Goldeneyes were just a small portion of the sexually charged atmosphere. New beginnings were everywhere and continuous, buds were popping, bushes displaying spring white flowers, Ruddy Ducks were racing and diving and their blue bills thrumming on their chests, the air was full of emerging insects, the lakes surface was dotted with dun sails and chironomids emerging water rings. Red winged Blackbirds were singing and chasing off claim jumpers.

Above the reed beds adult mayflies were mating and laying eggs. The resident Eagles kept wary eyes on possible interlopers bothering their nest. Newly arrived swallows were snatching insects out of the air, between forays for mud to construct new or repair old nests. Prairie Dogs threw dirt into the air as they cleaned old tunnels and dug new ones. Other Prairie Dogs scurried to new burrows with mouths full of grass for nest padding. Nature was very busy renewing itself. A black bear was spotted climbing the mountain slope and loon calls carried across the lakes surface to our listening ears.

One evening we watched with awe as dispersed eagle pairs gathered, seven of them circled and soared in the thermals that rose upwards in the evening skies. We were treated to a low-level flyover by an intermixed flock of swallows and blackbirds, we all involuntarily ducked, while watching the eagles air acrobatics. The air was full of flying insects and birds, it was a spontaneous airshow of epic proportions with no entrance fee required. As you can imagine, stories of nature's wonders were eagerly shared with the fishing stories. Fishing mishaps are part and partial to the fishing experience, a note stuck on the community bathroom door listed a rod and reel lost out in the lake, asking for its return if found. It was a familiar story, an untethered rod jerked from a boat by a big fish. While wading amongst the reeds casting to passing fish, I came across several items within a short distance from each other. A bent long handled net, a fly box, parachute cord, a broken carabineer wrapped with a severed piece of the same parachute chord. Whatever happened here was probably not a good experience for those involved. Pure speculation on my part, the bent and crushed handle of the net, looked as if it had been smashed in frustration over the gunnel of a boat. Or been stepped on as it lay across two items. What ever happened here the owner left the scene minus a fly box and flies, a net and carabineer and rope and possibly more. I teased Garry when I returned to camp about finding the fly box, he had lost in the lake a few years previous. I offered to return what was left of the flies in the box I found. He declined, only one resembled the fly it once was, and it was not long for this world at that. Yes, fishing is a contact sport that at times will upset your calm, as the big one swims away. In the future it will become the story they tell of the one that got away.

This safe haven, this one particular harbor, this fly-fishing heaven is a return destination for many of those that visit and fish its water. Kids have been raised here and still return, friendships are made here and renewed yearly with each visit. I have been a visitor for less than ten years, but I have met and become friends with those who have been coming for over 40 and 50 years. That is testament to its pull of place upon those who visit. There is fondness, reflection, and respect for this special place and all that it holds in the folds of this mountain wildness, this back of beyond.

This year's visit included a special event that came as a surprise and was celebrated upon its arrival. Like many others we got to experience the aurora borealis on the morning of May 11th. It was a sweet experience seen through cloudless skies with no light pollution to dim the experience. Steve and I spent 3 hours recording and enjoying the effects of our sun's coronal mass ejection, upon reaching our earth atmosphere it follows our earth's magnetic lines to the north and south pole and along the way it activates the gases in our atmosphere. That is a long explanation for the beautiful light show above us. This was a wish, come true for me, my first Aurora Borealis. I was in Awe I was at one of my most favorite spots and got to witness the goddess of dawn interact with the northern wind, now that is cool. Steve and I celebrated the wonder of it all with two fingers of scotch at 3 am. (side story – the next morning Steve talked to his wife Donna, they live on Whidbey Island as she watched the Aurora Borealis the whales in the Sarasota straight were singing, now how cool is that?)

No description of location is complete without discussing the weather that one encounters. May weather in the Cascade Mountain Range is changeable. My hoped-for weather is mild temperatures, light wind, and mild rain. This combination keeps the Mayflies on the water longer making my dry fly presentation more productive. AKA, I catch more trout. The weather I pack for is a little broader. In the spring, I have experienced snow, ice, sleet, rain, wind, and lots of wind, (people often leave their water-craft at the lower end of the lake and hike back to camp and then return to paddle back after the wind has abated), extended cold spells, major storms (camp destroying storms, flying boats, collapsed tents, sailing canopies and don't forget flooded tents) then throw in hot days, no wind, clear skies, and mirror calm lake surface. Shade is at a premium and fish seek the lakes bottom and fishing shuts down completely. In short, pack parkas and long underwear and throw in shorts, tee shirts and probably a bathing suit. Ps, I have never needed snowshoes but never say never.

I pack for a two week stay, my mentor has always stressed the fact, that to really get into the rhythm of a lake, takes at least two weeks. One needs at the minimum of three days to come down from the mental blight of modern living, we bring that over excited energy with us. At the end of the third day your mind begins to slow down and you see your new surroundings. The stress that you have stored up will take a little longer. When that happens, you will begin to enter lake time and your quality of life will improve dramatically. It helps that there is no cell coverage at this one particular harbor. I once had a fellow camper ask me if I had heard the news, when I answered no, he gleefully exclaimed, "me neither isn't that wonderful". You get the picture.

I will close this article with a passage from T.H. Whites book "The Once and Future King", You may be more familiar with the Disney adaptation "The Sword in the Stone."

One day Arthur/Wart comes to Merlyn sulking with disappointment at the injustice of life and Merlyn offers this advice on dealing with disappointment and sorrow. "The best thing for being sad... is to learn something. That is the only thing that never fails. You may grow old and trembling in your anatomies, you may lie awake at night listening to the disorder of your veins, you may miss your only love, you may see the world about you devastated by evil lunatics, or know your honor trampled in the sewers of baser minds. There is only one thing for it then — to learn. Learn why the world wags and what wags it. That is the only thing which the mind can never exhaust, never alienate, never be tortured by, never fear, or distrust, and never dream of regretting."

"Look at what a lot of things there are to learn — pure science, the only purity there is. You can learn astronomy in a lifetime, natural history in three, literature in six. And then, after you have exhausted a million lifetimes in biology and medicine and theocriticism and geography and history and economics — why, you can start to make a cartwheel out of the appropriate wood, or spend fifty years learning to begin to learn to beat your adversary at fencing. After that you can start again on mathematics, until it is time to learn to plough."

I know I could spend several lifetimes learning fly-fishing, it certainly has taught me a lot about our natural world and the interconnectedness of everything, our world is full of wonder, it is a waste of a life to get hung up in the minutia and fail to see all the gifts we are given, we are surrounded by beauty. Go outside and let yourself learn.

May you my readers, soon have a line in the water, with a fish taking your fly, and always keep an eye out for your own "One Particular Harbor". I dedicate this article to Sean Gallagher, Steve Egge and Garry Blankenship whose friendships brightens my life. Thank you for a wonderful time fly-fishing for rainbow trout in a little slice of heaven and for sharing stories around a campfire.

The Newsletter of the Alpine Fly Fishers 'The Fly Line' -

January of 1981

Editor: Ed Monger

This ~ In The Past ~ article was published in 1980. The information it contains is 43 years out of date and is not accurate.

This is a historical document only.

Program: Our new Program Chairman, Gene Rivers, has arranged for bruce Ferguson to meet with our club. Bruce will give a presentation on "Fly Fishing For Salmon in Puget Sound". This will be an excellent program as Bruce has had great success with this type of fishing. I, for one, an anxious to learn all his secrets!

Door Prizes: They will be provided by our new Gillie, Bob Giese.

December Meeting: The December meeting was a great success with many members and wives attending. Great job as chairman and Master of Ceremonies, Joe! The much coveted Orvis rod and reel outfit was won (very fittingly) by out-going president, Chris Jones. Although it wasn't planned that way, the rod was a good way to show thanks to Chris for a job well done.

New Officers: The Alpine Fly Fishers version of "AMTRAK" was in full swing at the December meeting and the following officers were elected:

President: Rose Marie Raudebaugh

Vice President: Jim Higgins
Secretary: Steve Anderson
Treasurer: Bruce Jones
Ghillie: Bob Giese
Trustee: Dick Mazza

This is an excellent slate of officers, let's get behind them and make 1981 a great year for the Alpine Fly Fishers. The other two trustees are: Pat Trotter, one year remaining and Ed Monger, with two years remaining.

Trustees Meeting: The Board of Trustees held their first meeting on 1981 at the home of Rose Marie Raudebaugh, our new president. Also in attendance were Jim Higgins, Chris Jones, Dick Mazza, and Ed Monger. The main part of the evening's discussion centered around getting new members into the club. To encourage this, a motion was passed to give a $75.00 give certificate to the club member that brings in the most new members in 1981. The contest will end with the November meeting nad a new member is defined as anyone eligible for membership who was not on our 1980 membership list. New members who contact club members through our advertising posters will not count towards the new membership prize. Jim Higgins will have more to say about this at the meeting. This contest, along wti the box of flies as gifts to our guests, should provide a good incentive to increase our ranks.

A tentative list of fishouts was drawn up and will be dicussed at the meeting. We should have more about this for you in next month's bulletin.

Club Posters: The new posters advertizing our club with information concerning membership are new ready for distribution. About fourteen sporting goods stores and other likely places have been targeted for their display. If you have a suggestion of a place that we might have missed, see Chris Jones. The posters have small tear-off cards with the phone numbers of members that can be contacted for meeting information. These posters are quite attractive and should also enhance our display at the annual Sportsman's Exposition in Seattle.

FFI Update for June
By Steve Jones

Purchase of the Yakima Canyon Ranch on the Yakima River is complete. The Washington State Council FFI and many FFI affiliated fly clubs contributed to the campaign to buy and preserve the property. BLM has taken possession of the land and on May 16 officially opened the the Bighorn Recreation Site. In 2023, Western Rivers Conservancy launched a campaign to purchase the 812-acre ranch and turn it over to BLM for management as part of its Yakima Canyon Conservation Area. Washington FFI was proud to back the effort and directors thanks all of the members and affiliated fly clubs that joined us in donating to the campaign.

Bighorn is now open to us all, but it's not fancy. The site contains a spacious gravel boat ramp, 15 primitive campsites and several day-use and picnic areas. Curtis Bryan, Wenatchee field manager in BLM's Spokane District said the priority this summer was to do basic clean-up of the site and open it for public use. For now, there is no charge for campsites. Improvements are coming, but before they begin Bryan said the agency wants to gather ideas from the public for the best way to develop and use the property. For that purpose, BLM has created at website at Yakima River Canyon (blmyakimarivercanyon.org) where fly fishers can learn about the opportunity at the site and suggest ideas for how it should be used.

FFI will hold its annual election of directors as usual in June. Be on the lookout for an email from the Council in late June that will contain a ballot. Please alert your club members to the opportunity to help choose the leadership of your Washington State Council of FFI.
